

Educating your child is for primary school? Parent-child education is more important

I remember when my eldest son, Hay, was in K1, I wrote, "Son, are you happy to start school? I ask my child "Are you happy?" one school year later. I don't have to consider answer. My wife and I are very happy and thankful for the love and effort of the kindergarten, and Hay is very happy every day and is eager to go to school every day (especially to meet the teachers). Someone reminded me, "I'll ask you again when you're ready to apply for Primary One, are you happy? It's just like a tray of cold water pouring on me.

Entering elementary school becomes the biggest shadow for parents?

I have heard many parents tell me that the biggest shadow in the three years of kindergarten is the promotion to primary school, how much do I have to do for my child? Should we arrange for interview classes? Should we take remedial classes in English or manners (no mistake, there are really training classes in the market to take remedial classes in manners)? Or is it enough to have 16 out of 18 arts? Or should we learn a cold skill to stand out from the crowd? For example, learning magic or acrobatics. Both parents and children are busy remembering to enjoy happy parent-child time, especially when all activities have a purpose, the mentality changes accordingly, and children may no longer be interested in interest classes.

Parents are worried about choosing their favorite elementary schools and making a resume

Especially when K3 students enter the "school enrollment season" in June, parents and children are faced with the choice of enrolling in 10 or 8 elementary schools. As a father, you would like to enroll in only one or two elementary schools of your choice, but will you be able to bear the responsibility of "no school for your son"?

Another problem is to make a resume, how beautiful does it have to be? Many schools say they will only accept a maximum of four pages, but I have seen other parents writing "work reports" for their children that are as thick as prospectuses and as beautiful as the Apple computer's profile book. If you look at your child, you don't see that he is particularly awake, nor is he a super "pretty boy", are you brave enough to make a 4-page resume?

"The choice between "promotion to primary school" and "being a human being

To sum up what Hay has learned in kindergarten over the past year. The most precious thing is not how good the "academic performance" is, but learning to get along with others and being polite. Of course, I am most grateful for the teacher's special instruction to Hay to "love Daddy and work hard", so that I can change from "someone I don't see all the time" to "someone I cherish seeing" in my child's mind. This kind of education may not be helpful for the promotion to primary school, but it is a value that is cherished between parents and children for a lifetime

Think about it, does kindergarten specialize in nurturing your child to "go on to primary school" or to "be a human being"? Similarly, as a parent, do you educate your child only for the purpose of "moving up to primary school"?
